

relapse, political attitudes and even our compulsion to purchase things that have been advertised.

If a thought is taken in and justified, then it builds a case; this case eventually leads to actions, ~~and then to~~ interactions and a multiple dynamics that become so complicated that the results can be difficult to ~~undo~~; ^{undo, ~~in~~ with} ~~undo~~; for war, for instance. ^{with} ~~instance~~ war. This happens in the individual and ~~in~~ society. For example, the ^{long-running} ~~established~~ conflict between the Soviet Union and the United States. ✓

During the ^{C W} ~~cold~~ war, half of the main road from Herat to Kabul was built by the U. S. and the other half by the Soviets. ~~This starts the example of what~~ ^{What seemed} ~~looks~~ like support to a poor nation, ^{ended} ~~but ends~~ up with jealousy and vying for position in the ^{C W} ~~cold~~ war, which produced the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The U. S. supported the Afghani resistance, armed them and embedded ^{itself} ~~ourselves~~ in the conflict. This escalated the war for years, ^{resulting in} ~~causing~~ ^{hatred,} ~~of hatred, complication and confusion,~~ ^{and increased terrorist} ~~the result of which increased attacks~~ ^{attacks} and terrorism. Of course, terrorism was around before the Afghani conflict, but it has steadily increased and become a bigger problem because of justified actions. Of course, the situation of terrorism grew even more complicated after Ben Laden and the invasion of Iraq. [?] ~~not withstanding~~ centuries of international conflict and bluster in international affairs.

I think the last part can be cut. It's confusing
