

~~if we don't dismiss them~~ unless we dismiss it,

Each one of our thoughts cause actions if we don't dismiss them. If we are not aware of what we are thinking, we accumulate beliefs that eventually drive us to further actions ^{that} which produce unexpected consequences or a relational dynamic, ^{negative} that effect us and come back upon us, while we deny that the original action ^{stemmed} originated from our lack of self-control. We must be very watchful of our thoughts ^{so} as not to ^{create for} cause ourselves feelings, ^{and actions that} which will in turn create more feelings and actions that we would never have chosen directly. Even those thoughts and actions that do not originate with us, ^{with} the cultural influences, we must be ^{careful not to} cautious to not perpetuate them through our automatic reactions. These myriad relational reactions are considered normal, yet when we look closer, we realize that they become part of our belief system, which we unknowingly created.

One misconception about Karma is that what happens to us is our fault or caused by us through a previous life ^{time}. ~~Considering the above,~~ ✓

^W We need to understand that our contribution ^{may be} is only in reaction. ^{Some things} Somethings

[?] they are really other peoples responsibility, as in the case of war and [?] natural catastrophe. There is also the fact that accidents and fate's destructive reactions effect us. Which is why the I Ching reminds us often of, "No blame." Our only choice is to neutralize the reactions of these how is this other people's responsibility?
